FOREWORD TO THE AMERICAN EDITION

In response to the urgent need of a handy pocket dictionary to aid the growing number of students in elementary Chinese in this country, the Department of Far Eastern Languages of Harvard University has undertaken to reprint this little dictionary by Dr. C. H. Fenn and Mr. Chin Hsien-tseng. Thanks are due to Dr. W. B. Pettus for giving prompt permission for the undertaking and for furnishing his own precious copies of the book in first-class condition for the reproduction. The necessary funds for this publication were furnished by the Rockefeller Foundation.

The urgency of the task has made it impossible to go into any extensive revisions or additions, aside from some corrections and the introduction of a few new terms which have recently come into general use. The chief features in this edition are (1) the rewriting of the pages on standards and styles of pronunciation and the exposition on tones, and (2) the marking of the neutral tone with dots and circles, making this the first Chinese-English dictionary in which such information is given. Mr. Min-yuan Wang was responsible for a part of the revision of the entries and the mechanical details in preparation for the reproduction, and Dr. Y. R. Chao was responsible for revising the introduction and furnishing the data on the neutral tones.

FOREWORD

The compiler of this little book finds a very special satisfaction in the fact that he is giving to the public a thing the lack of which he has personally felt keenly for the more than thirty years of his sojourn in "The Land of Sinim". Of making of dictionaries there is no end, and there are already many pocket dictionaries upon the market; but the compiler of this latest of them all has never found one specially adapted to be the pocket companion, from his first day to his last, of the foreigner who comes to China, either for business or for missions; furnishing on the instant (9.7-100) of all the information he requires as to Chinese printed or written characters, or speech for every day use. The vocabularies have always been too large or too small, the translations too few or too many, the common combinations too numerous or lacking altogether, the information given as to the composition of characters and as to their relative frequency too meager, or hidden in out-of-the-way places. The compiler of the book now before you believes that he has fairly overcome all these difficulties, and that all students and speakers of Chinese, except those wishing to acquire a strictly technical vocabulary in certain professional lines and those planning profound study of Chinese classical literature, will find in this little book all the requisites for ordinary conversation and reading.

The book was primarily intended as an Index to the Five Thousand Character Cards prepared by the compiler for the North China Union Language School for the use of its own students and any others who may feel the need of this great auxiliary to language study. After selecting and preparing for the press these 5000 character cards, with their abundance of convenient information as to the characters' earliest met and most frequently used in the Chinese language, the compiler began on an Index. But why not make this a supplement, as well as a complement, to the Character Cards? The individual characters are not the thing which the student most frequently desires to use in speech and in ordinary reading. The Chinese may be a monosyllabic language, but Chinese speech is largely dissyllabic, and the clustering of the most common combinations of characters in connection with them adds many fold to the usefulness of an Index. Therefore this Index, without adding greatly to its bulk, has become a most convenient pocket Dictionary. The cutting out of the second 5000 infrequently used characters found in most pocket dictionaries makes room for these useful combinations and saves many a long search.

The first column on each page gives, of course, the characters, with the various forms in which they may be encountered, also the Peking tone of each. The arrangement of the whole is that of the Wade Romanization, not because it is ideal, but simply because its recognition is most nearly universal. The second column gives the Radical, the third, the Phonetic, with its number in Soothill's Dictionary. The fourth column gives the usual translations, common combinations, and indications as to whether the character when thus read is colloquial (俗) or literary (文), and whether it is used as a "Classifier", or Numerator (C), or as a Surname (S). The fifth column gives other readings of the same character, under which further information may be sought. The sixth column indicates the group to which the character has been assigned in reference to the earliness of its occurrence in the Lessons of the Language School. The School's Character Cards are arranged in ten groups of 500 each, lettered from A to K. Groups A and B differ slightly from the others in that they include a few characters which would not occur in a list of the 1000 most frequently used characters, but which do occur in the Language School Lessons of the first year. Group P includes the Phonetics which are not used as characters.

Unless unconscious omissions have been made, this Dictionary Index includes all characters which occur in any of the Language School Lessons, Baller's Primer, Mateer's Mandarin Lessons, Kuan Hua Chih Nan, The Old and New Testaments, and the Blodget-Goodrich Hymnal.

A Radical Index and List of Radicals will be found at the end of the book, which is sent forth in the hope that, with others as well as the compiler, it may "meet a long-felt want."

INTRODUCTION TO THE THIRD EDITION

The continued demand for Dr. Fenn's 5000 Dictionary proves that he and Mr. Chin have done their work well. The 5000 characters which form the basis for the dictionary have been selected in a scientific way. An actual count of the material studied and used by foreign students of Chinese during their early years in China has been made. The work is a "phrase dictionary"; the most commonly used phrases with their English equivalents have been selected and are given under each character. The radical of each principal character is shown, thus assisting students in learning to "spell" Chinese characters according to their form, which is one of the most helpful ways of fixing them in the memory. This dictionary forms an index to Dr. Fenn's Character Slips, of which 5000 have been printed, classified according to the order of frequency so that the most important may be learned first.

Experience shows that this dictionary meets most of the needs of students of spoken Chinese during the first years of their work on the language. No absolutely ideal vocabulary can be presented, because individual needs differ, but the basis of selection used in this dictionary has produced a time-saving compromise. Unabridged dictionaries are necessary for research students and all students must secure technical vocabularies if their work deals with science, philosophy, politics, or religion. It is true that by the end of the second year, or in the third year, the students should begin to use the large standard Chinese dictionaries, such as the "Tz'u Yuan" (辭源), or "K'ang Hsi Tzu Tien" (康熙字典), but these are not used until the student has completed some such work as Brandt's Introduction to Literary Chinese and has plunged into the vast sea of Chinese literature, which offers to the Western student more of new and unexplored territory than does any European language he can learn, and which amply repays the years of effort required to secure a working knowledge of Chinese.

PREFACE TO THE FOURTH EDITION.

Experience has proved that the 5000 words which Dr. Fenn has included in his dictionary have been well chosen and well compiled. An increasing demand has necessitated a new edition. Dr. C. H. Fenn, ably assisted by Mr. Chin Hsien Tseng, has not only provided students with the most common words classified according to frequency, but has also made an excellent selection of the terms and phrases that are still in current use.

This small dictionary is now rated as one of the most acceptable for beginners. While unabridged and technical dictionaries are always required by advanced students, it has been found that a dictionary of this size and nature is most useful at the early stage of acquiring the language. The errata of previous editions have been carefully revised. One may rely upon this edition for the pronunciation of Peking Mandarin now coming into general use.

PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION

Those who have used this dictionary in the past may care to know how this present fifth edition has been changed from those of the past. Mr. Chin Hsien-tseng, has been engaged in the compilation and revisions of the book from its very inception with Dr. Fenn. He had been inserting the numbers under the radicals in the second columns of the text, and doing other mechanical work connected with a reprinting, when the writer arrived last April with leisure to assist.

In our collaboration on the work at the beginning we did not plan changes radical enough for us to call the reprinting a revision. But by request we inserted 150 phrases selected by the teachers in the College from the newer teaching material; we also deleted a few of the obsolete phrases, and corrected some errors copied from other dictionaries or revealed by recent discoveries and studies in things Chinese. We have occasionally rearranged the definitions of the basic 5,000 characters so as to bring root meanings first, and from page 101 onward we have put illustrative Chinese phrases immediately after the English meaning they illustrate, rather than leave them at the end of the list where the student not familiar with them would be at a loss from not knowing to which of several meanings in the definition they belong. We have also tried to make the book still more useful by adding General Information, giving the usual means for determining dates, and places, etc., met in general reading. In addition we have listed all of the 438 surnames in Po Chia Hsing not found in our text, and also have compiled two more unusual tables.

One of these, the "Chinese Ordinals", shows the many ways of indicating series numbers from one to 1000 by the use of well-known groups of characters and classic quotations; the other table gives the "Standard Methods of Showing Pronunciations, (including tones)", much like our diacritical marks, since Kang Hsi in 1716 A.D. These tables are unique so far as we know, and the latter is useful as a key to tone marks in the Bible, William's Dictionary, etc. We have inserted a list not only of the radicals but also of the phonetics with the numbers used in the text, after Soothill, calling it the "Phonetic Index". In this Index the letters under each character refer it to some one of the eight groups (A. a, B. b, b, C. c, D) arranged in order of importance as to number and certitude of derivatives, by J. F. Corta, S. J. and J. A. Colinas. S. J. in their recent Latin brochure "Phonetical Series P. Wiegner". In consideration of these efforts we have been emboldened to add our names on the title page as revisers in this present edition.

ALPHABETICAL INDEX pp. 1-659

1st column on each page gives character to be defined, sometimes linked by a line at the left with one or more other forms of the same character, and the number of its Peking tone.

2nd column gives the radical and its number.

3rd column gives the phonetic and its Soothill number.

4th column has the usual translations and other facts, as S, C, 俗, 文.

5th column gives other readings of the same character under which more facts may be found in this book.

6th column shows frequency groups based on earliness of occurrence in the textbooks of 1926 by capital letters.

Thus capitals in last column show:—

A = 1st 500 group; B = 2nd 500; C = 3rd 500; D = 4th 500; E = 5th 500;

F = 6th 500; G = 7th 500; H = 8th 500; I = 9th 500; K = 10th 500;

P = the remaining phonetics not found in the text.

IN THE TEXT. 4th Col. C means Classifier or Numerator; Chien* 減 means that the adjacent character in the first column is an abbreviated writing for the one above it.

S = surname either single or double, used only in the fourth column.

Su* 俗 = colloquial character.

Wen* 文 = literary character.

NUMBERS IN THE PHONETIC INDEX, pp. XIV-XIX, under the characters refer to page in the Dictionary. Digits and numbers on the four margins of the pages indicate Soothill list numbers. Letters under a character refer it to some one of the eight groups in the order of importance, A, a, B, b, C, c, D.

NUMBERS IN THE RADICAL INDEX, pp. 670-695, (1) opposite each character refer to the page in the book; (2) the small numbers at the upper corner of a character indicate the first character under the radical to have this number of strokes in excess of the number of strokes in the radical; (3) Numbers in parenthesis at the top of a page show that radicals of that number of strokes begin in the column underneath. When they continue to another page it is printed without the parenthesis as "x strokes (con't)",

A dot (or a circle) before a character indicates that the character must be (or may be) pronounced without stress and without tone.

A Table of Pekingese Initial and Final Sounds combined with Chinese Characters and the

Chinese Phonetic Letters (注音符號)

Initials 聲母

Ch - 之 ㄓ	Hs - 希 ㄒ	P' - 滂 ㄆ'	Ts' - 疵 ㄘ'
Ch' - 痴 ㄓ'	J - 入 ㄐ	S - 私 ㄙ	Tz' - 疵 ㄘ'
Ch - (chi) 基 ㄐ	K - 格 ㄎ	Sz - 私 ㄙ	W - 烏 ㄨ
Ch' - (ch'i) 欺 ㄐ'	K' - 克 ㄎ'	Sh - 尸 ㄕ	Y - 衣 ㄩ
	L - 勒 ㄌ	T - 德 ㄊ	Yü - 迂 ㄩ
	M - 墨 ㄇ	T' - 特 ㄊ'	Ch - ㄐ, Ch' - ㄐ'
F - 弗 ㄈ	N - 訥 ㄋ	Ts - 資 ㄘ	used before 一
H - 黑 ㄏ	P - 薄 ㄆ	Tz - 資 ㄘ	and ㄌ only

There are still three other initial phonetic letters ㄆ—V, ㄋ—Ng, ㄍ—Gn, which were formerly included with the above 24, but because they are not used in Pekingese and the New Standard National Language, they are now omitted. The medial vowels, W, Y, Yü are included here as initials because they represent these vowels when they occur at the beginning of a word. Certain of the initials are sometimes used alone without any final, these are Chih ㄓ, Ch'ih ㄓ', Jih ㄐ, Shih ㄕ, Szu ㄙ, Tzu ㄘ and Tz'u ㄘ'.

Finals 韻母

-A 阿 ㄚ	-Er 兒 ㄦ	-Iu 幽 ㄩ	-Ui 威 ㄨㄟ
-Ai 哀 ㄞ	-I 衣 ㄟ	-Iung 雍 ㄩㄥ	-Un 溫 ㄨㄣ
-An 安 ㄢ	-Ia 鴉 ㄧㄚ	-O 癩 ㄛ	-Ung 翁 ㄨㄥ
-Ang 盎 ㄤ	-Iang 央 ㄧㄤ	-Ou 歐 ㄡ	-Uo 窩 ㄨㄛ
-Ao 奧 ㄠ	-Iao 腰 ㄧㄠ	-U 烏 ㄨ	-Ü 迂 ㄩ
-E 厄 ㄜ	-Ieh 葉 ㄧㄝ	-Ua 蛙 ㄨㄚ	-Üan 遠 ㄩㄢ
-Eh 也 ㄝ	-Ien 烟 ㄧㄢ	-Uai 歪 ㄨㄞ	-Üeh 月 ㄩㄝ
-Ei 危 ㄟ	-Ih*	-Uan 彎 ㄨㄢ	-Ün 允 ㄩㄣ
-En 恩 ㄣ	-In 音 ㄣ	-Uang 汪 ㄨㄤ	-Ü
-Eng 亨 ㄥ	-Ing 英 ㄩㄥ	-Uei 威 ㄨㄟ

* In Pekingese there are only four cases of this final i.e. Chih, Ch'ih, Jih, Shih; so the Phonetic Letters could indicate these four sounds independently without this final as 出, 尺, 日, 尸.

 There are but three cases of this final, viz, Szü, Tzü, Tz'ü and the Letters could indicate these three initial sounds by ㄗ, ㄘ, ㄙ, without this final. So it seems unnecessary to have Phonetic Letters for these two sounds—Ih and Ü.

STANDARDS OF PRONUNCIATION

The standard of Chinese pronunciation is that of Peiping. Some Western sinologists have experimented with the idea of constructing an artificial Mandarin which takes into account features of other dialects of the Mandarin group. For instance, the French scholars have always distinguished between dentals and gutturals before i and ü, e.g., Chin is differentiated into tsin 晉 and kin 金. The original, 1874 edition of S. W. Williams' Syllabic Dictionary makes the same distinction, besides retaining a fifth or entering tone and other features. Since the coming into general use of the Wade System, which is based on the dialect of Peiping, most writers on Chinese subjects in English and some others have consistently followed the pronunciation of Peiping as it is, without consideration of any other dialectal features. The standard of pronunciation in China has had a similar development. The official standard pronunciation embodied in 國音字典 Kuo-yin Tzu-tien, Shanghai, 1920, was also a constructed Mandarin, having among other Southern features an entering tone, and the distinction between tsin and kin, etc. Since 1932, however, the standard has also been changed to that of Peiping. The official publication superseding the Kuo-yin Tzu-tien is 國音常用字彙 Gwoin Charngyong T'zyhhuey, Shanghai, 1932, of which probably a more accessible form is found in an appendix to the dictionary 辭海 Tz'u Hai, Shanghai, 1937, in the form of an index to about 9,000 characters. Besides using the National Phonetic Letters, these new publications also use a system of National Romanization, of which the most available form in this country is W. Simon's Chinese Sentence Series, London, 1942.

STYLES OF PRONUNCIATION

In Peiping, as elsewhere, there are variations of pronunciation according to class, education, occasion, mood, etc. Thus, 弄 is pronounced *lung*⁴ in the title of a piece of music, *nung*⁴ in average unaffected speech, *neng*⁴ in rather informal speech, and *nou*⁴ in the speech of children and illiterates. The greatest variation of pronunciation in Peiping occurs in words belonging to the entering tone of Ancient Chinese which ended in -k. Thus, 拍 p'ʌk > modern literary *p'o*⁴, colloq. *p'ai*¹. Following is a list of finals in which such alternation occurs:

Literary	e	o	u	üeh
Colloquial	ai ei	ai ao ei	iu ou	iao
Example	窄 黑	白 薄 北	六 熟	脚

Which type is the usual one to use depends both upon the context or situation and upon the individual speaker. This dictionary has only space to record the variants for the compounds which are included here.

Characters used as particles, etc. usually have a strong form, or reading pronunciation, and a weak form, or spoken pronunciation. The most important of these are:

Character	着	了	麼	呢	的
Strong	cho ²	liao ³	ma ¹ , mo ³	ni ^{1,2}	ti ⁴
Weak	·che , ·chih	·le	·me	·ne	·te

Because of the wide currency of the orthography used in H. A. Giles' Chinese-English Dictionary, it will be well to mention the chief points in which it differs from that of the present dictionary. The class of syllables chio, ch'io, hsio, and yo in Giles is definitely obsolete, and is now completely absorbed into chüeh, ch'üeh, hsüeh, and yüeh respectively. The distinction between syllables i and yi has no basis in the dialect and the two are combined here under the heading I, Yi, placed after H. In syllables listed here as ko, ke; k'o, k'e; ho, he; o, e, which have -o in Giles and -e in Chauncey Goodrich's Pocket Dictionary, the Giles orthography is recommended, but the actual pronunciation is always -e, there being however no ambiguity resulting from this orthography.

A graphical simplification adopted in this dictionary is the omission of diacritics over vowels in syllables like ken, szu, etc.

In this revised edition of 1942, if a pronunciation of a character is added in the fourth (main) column without parentheses, it is to replace the one under which the character occurs.

TONES

A word in Chinese is what it is, not only through having such and such consonants and vowels, which form the initials and finals, but also through having a certain tone, or change (or no change) of pitch during the voiced part of the syllable. To the unsophisticated Chinese speaker, *ma*¹ 'mother' and *ma*³ 'horse' are as different as bad and bed to an English-speaking person. If we divide the pitch of a person's voice into five points: 1 low, 2 half-low, 3 middle, 4 half-high, 5 high, we can describe a tone by naming its starting and ending pitch (including a turning point for circumflex tones). The four tones of Mandarin will then be as follows:

No.	Chinese Name	English Name	Description	Pitch
1 陰平(聲)	yin ¹ - p'ing ² -(sheng ¹)	Upper Even (Tone)	High level	55:
2 陽平(聲)	yang ² - p'ing ² -(sheng ¹)	Lower Even (Tone)	High rising	35:
3 上聲	shang ³ - sheng ¹	Rising Tone	Low rising	214:
4 去聲	ch'ü ⁴ - sheng ¹	Falling Tone	High falling to low	51:

When syllables are spoken in succession, changes known as tone-sandhi occur. There are two important rules of tone-sandhi in the Peiping dialect.

(1) A third tone followed by any tone except another third tone is pronounced without its final rise. This is known as the half-third tone. In *hao*³*jen*², 'good man', for example, *hao*³ does not only start low, but stays low in pitch.

(2) A third tone followed by another third tone is pronounced high rising and thus indistinguishable from the second tone, as *hao*³-*mi*³ 'good rice' is pronounced *hao*²-*mi*³.

A very important feature of the Peiping dialect is the neutral tone, or pitch of the atonic syllable, which, being unstressed, does not have one of the four regular tones. The notation for the atonic syllable is a dot before the syllable for compulsory cases and a circle for optional cases, that is, cases in which the syllable may or may not lose its stress and tone. The actual pitch of the atonic syllable varies according to the tone of the preceding syllable. After the first two tones it is half-low, after the third tone it is half-high, and after the fourth it is low.

It is one thing to know how a neutral tone is pronounced; it is another thing to know when a neutral tone is used. Particles, interjection, pronouns after verbs, and other 'empty words' which do not carry important concrete meanings in a sentence have the neutral tone. Except for particles, these are mostly optional neutral tones. More important than those just mentioned are fixed neutral tones in compounds, which have to be learned as such and cannot be reasoned out by rule. This is where it is important to record the actual cases in this dictionary. In this 1942 edition, all neutral tones in the compounds have been marked with dots or circles according as the neutrality is compulsory or optional. It should be noted however that the neutral tone occurring in the second of a three-syllable compound is usually left unmarked, as any syllable in this position tends to be weakened and thus ceases to present a lexical case.

An extreme case of the neutral tone is the suffix 兒 -(e)r, which is so weakened as to form one syllable with the preceding one. In such combinations, certain phonetic changes occur, of which the most important to note is that if the preceding syllable ends in -i (in a diphthong) or -n, the -i or -n is dropped, as 今 *chin*¹, p. 74 but 今兒 *chier*¹; 蓋 *kai*⁴, but 蓋兒 *kar*⁴, p. 236. In this dictionary, an unmarked 兒 is always taken to be non-syllabic except under the main word *erh*² itself or when marked as 2. Only when it is both syllabic and unstressed is it marked with a dot, as under nũ, p. 367.

The Sexagenary Cycle

The Chinese cycle is sixty years. Each year is denoted by two characters; the first, a Celestial Stem; the second, an Horary character. They are taken in regular sequence, commencing with 甲子, 乙丑, 丙寅, etc., and as the least common multiple of 10 and 12 is 60, the cycle recommences in like order after 60 years.

The first cycle was set by Huang Ti B.C. 2697 and the system is continuous to the present, in groups of three cycles called respectively (上元, 中元 and 下元) The present cycle beginning 1924 is the third (下元) in the 26th group since Huang Ti and it is the 78th cycle. This group, from 1804 A.D. to 1983 A.D. inclusive, is found below.

Chinese Ordinals

Certain groups of characters are used in lieu of numerals for enumerating articles, houses, classes, seniorities of persons, seasons, etc. These may be compared to our series of the letters, A.B.C., a.b.c., etc. Most of the groups of characters are used for numbering the volumes of works by literati. For instance if there is a set of four books the volumes are numbered with the four characters 元, 亨, 利, 貞; this phrase being quoted from the beginning of the Book of Changes, 易經, you may know that the book marked with 利 is the 3rd. book of a set of four; if the work involves six volumes it should be marked with 六藝 Six Arts, eight with 八卦 Eight Diagrams, etc. The last two groups of longer series 百家姓 and 千字文 are ordinarily used by the pawn shops.

The following is a list of the common groups of characters with the respective numerals and the uses in each series.
